Website Design & Build

The first professional website I worked on was Opel Europe for Modem Media Poppe Tyson in 1999. I prepared and optimised the graphics and passed them onto the coders who hand-coded the sites.

After that I started using Dreamweaver and watched and learned the code from its window. I started using Dreamweaver for speed and hand coded for specific functions.

Then HTML5 and CSS came along – and I learned as much as I could, but gave up when Dreamweaver became unusable due to Responsive Layouts.

I had friends who would rave about WordPress – but it didn't seem a professional solution to me. Then I was forced to use it – I had a CMS website that I needed putting together in a hurry, with some advanced functionality, that would be impossible for me to code myself. I found WordPress a delight after using bloated Dreamweaver – and the range of off-the-shelf functionality was something that I have never thought I would access to.

I now use WordPress almost exclusively for building websites. I've used a variety of premium themes and free and paid plugins – getting to learn the nuances of each one, and still hand coding and editing the CSS when I need the page to look a certain way.

National Trust Jersey

As part of a complete rebrand for their 80th birthday, including Logo, corporate guidelines, signage and stationery, Vibrand created Brand Guidelines and designed and built The National Trust for Jersey's new website, based upon a premium theme to match the UK's division.

The branding took 3 months, taking over from ideas from their existing agency (which were later scrapped). The website comprises over 100 pages, and took 9 months to build.

Functionality of the site included:

- Google Maps for all Places of Interest
- Donate Charity Button
- E-commerce store to purchase merchandise or membership
- Event Calendar
- Ticketing for Event Calendar and EventBrite integration
- MailChimp newsletter integration
- Social Media feeds: Facebook, Twitter and Instagram.
- News blog and Video
- Accommodation Reservation System

Vibrand also produced bespoke training videos and training sessions to enable volunteers to contribute and edit the website.

Become a Trust Volunteer

We value the massive contribution made by all of our volunteers. Whether you want to improve your CV, make like-minded friends, or just want to give something back to your local community, committing to volunteer with us could be the best decision you ever make. Three of our volunteers tell their stories below.

Sarah's Story

Whilst studying Geography at St Andrews University, I was given the opportunity to work on a summer internship programme with the Lands Team at The National Trust for Jersey and I thoroughly enjoyed the experience. On completing my studies I returned to Jersey and was excited to discover that not only would I be able to continue my work with the Trust through volunteering but would also be able to use my university skills to carry out a Geographical Information Systems (GIS) mapping project.

Mac's Story

I came to volunteering at The National Trust for Jersey by accident. I worked on shifts at the airport as a refueller. Unfortunately, I was diagnosed with a health problem; my doctor advised me that I needed to undertake more exercise. I didn't fancy running on the treadmill or lifting weights at the gym! My wife was listening to BBC Radio Jersey and Charles Alluto the CEO for The National Trust was being interviewed and mentioned The Trust were looking for volunteers.

Martin & Barbara's Story

Martin and Barbara Pitman joined The National Trust in the late 1970s and spent many happy family holidays in the UK often visiting National Trust houses and sites with their three boys. During these visits they noticed that many of the house staff who welcomed visitors to the houses and gardens were volunteers. It was during these holidays that Martin and Barbara started to think that once they retired from teaching they may like to volunteer for the Trust in Jersey.

CenterSquare

The CenterSquare website was part of a larger rebranding project when the company changed its name after the founder left.

The website was designed as layered Photoshop files and then passed onto a web development team to build. Comprehensive website and brand guidelines were produced for every page and element.

Healthwatch Lambeth

Healthwatch Lambeth is a body established under the Health and Social Care Act 2012, which took effect in April 2013. The Healthwatch network is made up of local Healthwatch across each of the 152 local authority areas and Healthwatch England, the national body.

Healthwatch Lambeth is a leading member of this body.

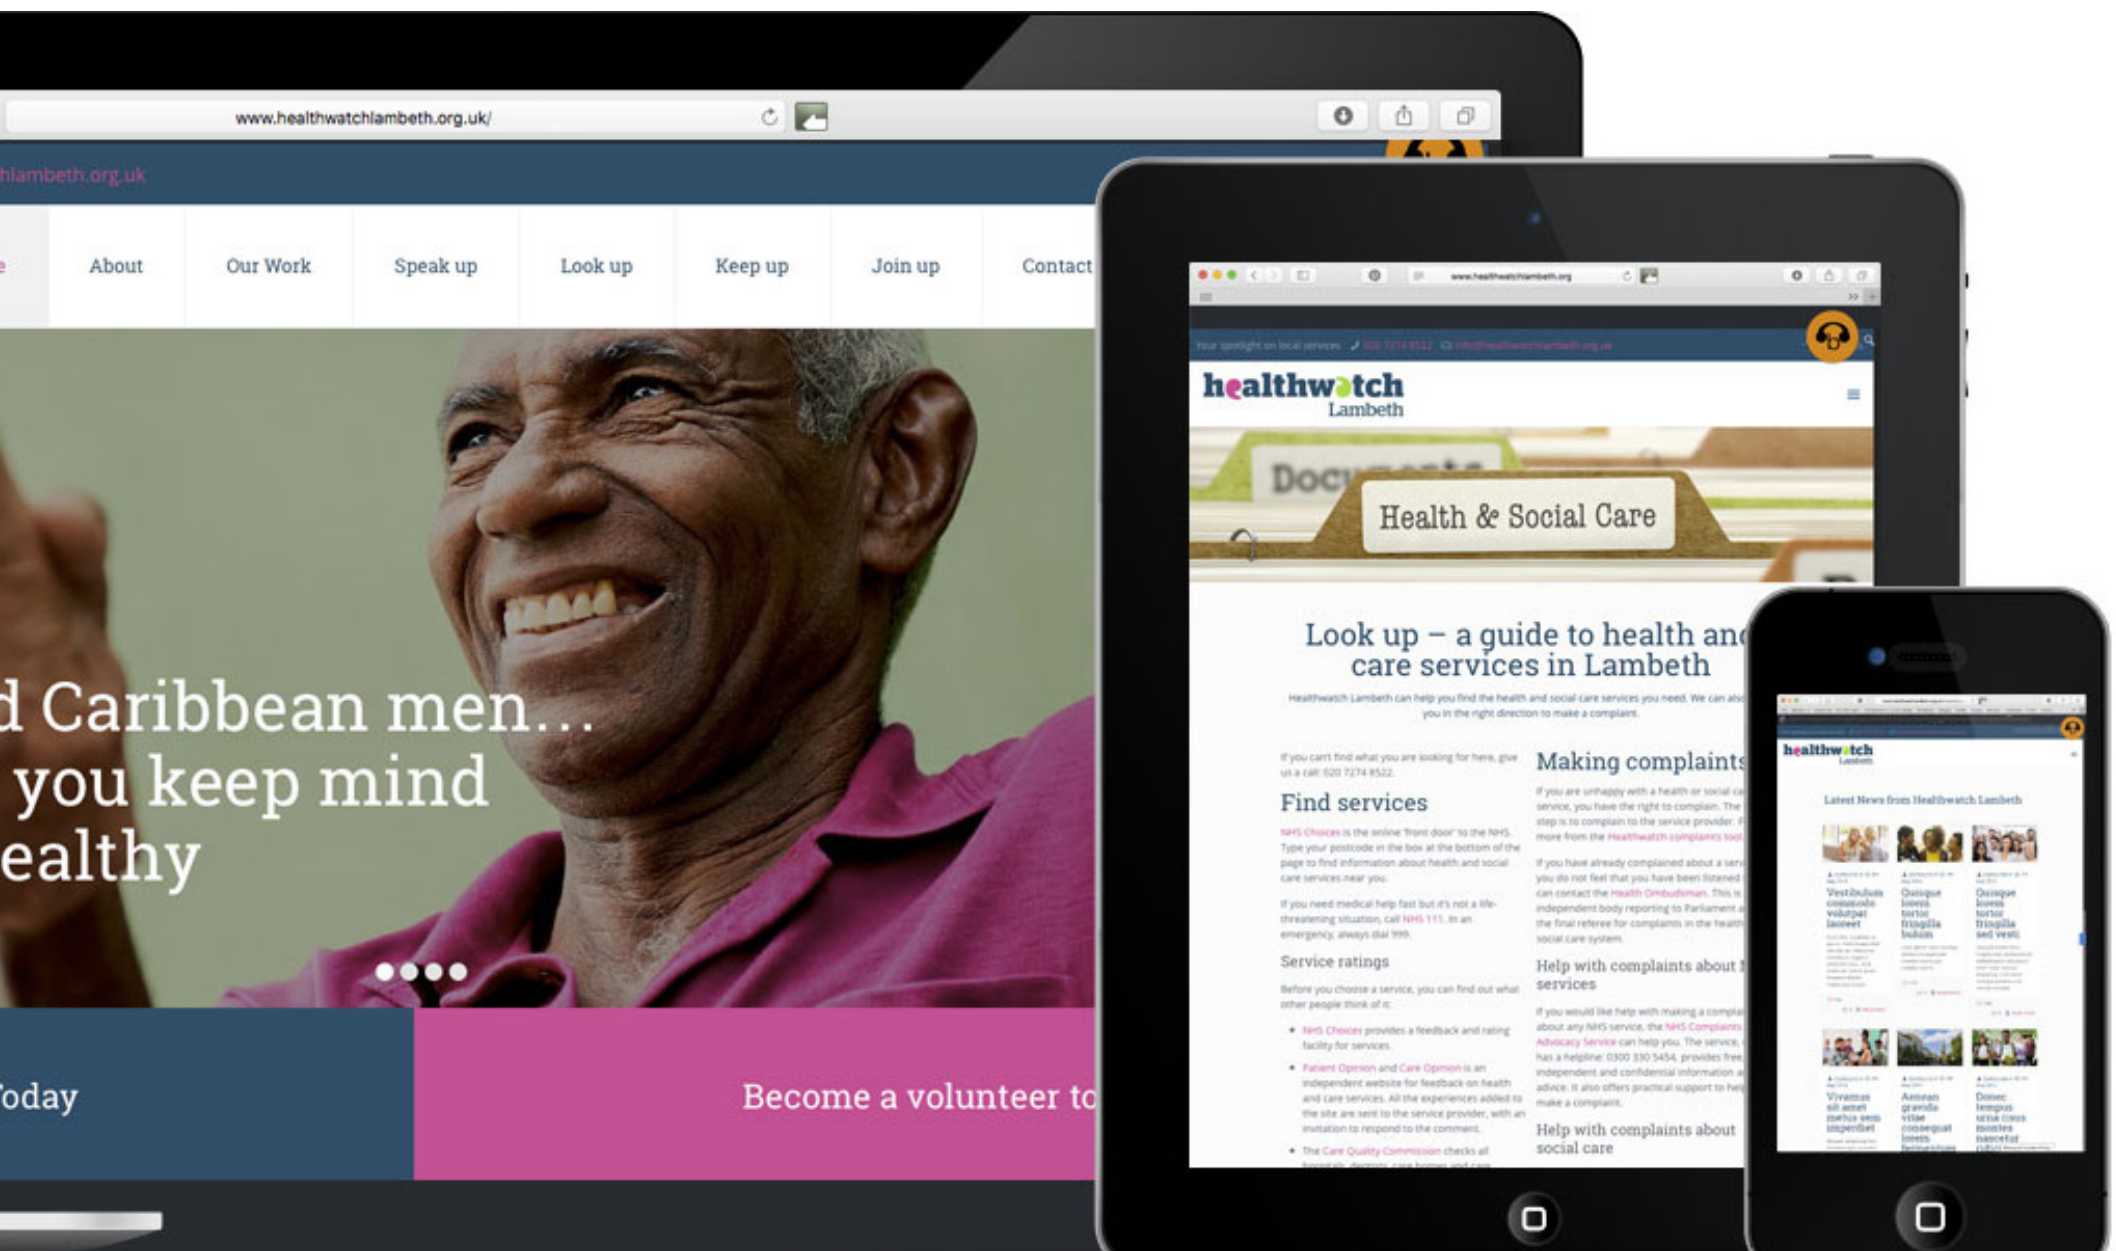

All Healthwatch areas were given a Drupal 'website in a box' template which they all use. Healthwatch Lambeth wanted a more up-to-date website look, which would engage the local community and would be easy for staff to keep updated.

Vibrant put together their site within 20 days – and gave the staff face-to-face training as well as video tutorials based on their own site and functionality.

Many of the photographs on the website were taken by Jonathan Harbourne, with stock imagery used to supplement the theme.
