Rebranding Urdang to CenterSquare

CenterSquare Investment Management is a real asset investment subsidiary of the Bank of New York Mellon Corporation. The firm provides real asset investment management services to institutional investors through private equity investments, real estate securities, infrastructure securities, and real estate debt investments.

CenterSquare Investment Management was founded in 1987 and is based in Plymouth Meeting, Pennsylvania with additional offices in New York and Los Angeles and affiliates in London and Singapore*. Focused exclusively on real estate, our investment approach includes top-down market/country selection and bottom-up underwriting of properties, companies, and management teams. Our clients include corporate, public and Taft-Hartley plan sponsors, endowments and foundations, financial institutions, and high net worth individuals.

Mr Urdang established the firm as “Urdang”. BNY Mellon bought the company, but kept the name Urdang until Mr Urdang retired. Jonathan Harbourne won the pitch to rebrand it (against Allison Mitchell), and renamed and rebranded it “CenterSquare Investment Management”.

Jonathan worked directly with one employee of the firm. Jonathan single-handedly designed every part of the new branding – from logo and colours, printed and publicity material and website. The website was built by BNY Mellon’s in-house web team.

CenterSquare U.S.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES STRATEGY

INVESTMENT OBJECTIVE

The CenterSquare U.S. Real Estate Securities Strategy invests in a diversified portfolio of publicly traded real estate securities, such as Real Estate Investment Trusts (REITs) and Real Estate Operating Companies (REOCs), and seeks to outperform the benchmark FTSE NAREIT Equity Index on an annual basis.

INVESTMENT STRATEGY

CenterSquare's strategy is to invest in a diversified portfolio of real estate securities with low-relative stock prices to provide our clients with high, risk-adjusted returns. CenterSquare aims to uncover low-relative price opportunities across sectors and at different turning points in the real estate cycle by looking beyond the obvious factors of stock price and underlying real estate value. CenterSquare's strategy recognizes that real estate securities are not simply stock, or real estate, but hybrid financial investments. As such, they are valued on a number of factors, such as the value of the firm's property portfolio, as well as critical business and market factors, which include: the company's capitalization, its position within public capital markets, and quality of its management team.

FUNDAMENTAL ANALYSIS

Based on industry-specific analyses that evaluate stock values as well as operational and qualitative factors, CenterSquare selects approximately 40-60 stocks that we believe offer the most promising total return potential. The portfolio is diversified across sector, region and company. Stock weightings are determined through the use of a rigorous risk control process, which helps enable CenterSquare to maximize the portfolio's risk-adjusted total returns.

CENTERSQUARE PROCESS

WHY INVEST IN REAL ESTATE SECURITIES?

LIQUIDITY: more liquid and cost efficient way to invest in commercial real estate.
ATTRACTIVE TOTAL RETURN: current income and capital appreciation.
DIVERSIFICATION BENEFITS: low correlation to other asset classes and lower volatility.
INFLATION HEDGE: has historically offered capital preservation and inflation protection.

CUMULATIVE RETURNS (INCEPTION DATE JULY 1995 THROUGH MARCH 2013)

The U.S. Total Return Composite ("Composite") strategy focuses on investing in a diversified portfolio of real estate securities, such as real estate investment trusts ("REITs") and real estate operating companies. The Composite includes all discretionary, fee-paying portfolios invested in the total return strategy, and consisted of 30 accounts with a market value of $1.919 billion as of March 31, 2013. Performance results are calculated on a total return basis and include dividends and income and all realized and unrealized capital gains. Gross of fee returns include trade-related costs, but do not reflect investment management fees earned by Urdang. Net of fee returns reflect investment management fees earned by Urdang. The Composite returns consist of size-weighted portfolio returns using beginning of period values to weight portfolio returns, and valuations and returns are computed and stated in U.S. dollars. Past performance does not guarantee future results. Many factors affect performance, including changes in market conditions and interest rates, as well as the market's response to economic, political, and/or financial developments. The FTSE NAREIT Equity Index is a free float market capitalization-weighted index measuring equity-financed real estate investments that meet minimum size and liquidity criteria and are traded on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, and the NASDAQ National Market System. The FTSE NAREIT Equity Index is part of the FTSE NAREIT U.S. Real Estate Index Series. The index performance presented is based on total return calculations which add the income a stock's dividend provides to the performance of the index. This benchmark does not reflect investment management fees and is for illustrative purposes and should not be relied upon as an accurate measure of comparison. An investor should consider the fund's investment objective, risks, charges and expenses carefully before investing. AN INTRODUCTION TO CENTERSQUARE INVESTMENT MANAGEMENT

Firm Overview

Founded in 1987, CenterSquare Investment Management (formerly Urdang) is an investor in, and manager of public, private, global and U.S.-only real estate investment strategies. CenterSquare is the real estate investment subsidiary of BNY Mellon. As an investor and manager, our success is firmly rooted in aligning our firm's interests with those of our clients, partners and employees, as well as our commitment to alpha-generating research.

“Our entrepreneurial philosophy, market-leading investment strategies, and commitment to clients and employees continue to dominate our culture.

We believe it is the combination of our entrepreneurial culture and institutional strength that has allowed us to be successful over our 26 years in the industry. Inspired by the legacy of our founder Scott Urdang and carried through 18 years of being on the frontier of real estate investment management, CenterSquare retains the spirit of an entrepreneurial firm, focused on maximizing the value of our real estate investments and growing the capital with which we've been entrusted. Our parent company, BNY Mellon, gives us strong institutional support and world class compliance, technology, human resources, and legal resources, allowing us to focus on what we do best – make profitable investments in commercial real estate.

CenterSquare Investment Management is headquartered in suburban Philadelphia, with a regional office in Los Angeles and BNY Mellon Asset Management professionals based in London and Singapore. Our clients include corporate, public and Taft-Hartley plan sponsors, foundations and endowments, financial institutions (sub-advisory relationships) and high net worth individuals. CenterSquare Investment Management Holdings, Inc. and CenterSquare Investment Management, Inc., collectively “CenterSquare”, are registered investment advisors with the SEC.

The firm's founder, Scott Urdang, taught real estate finance and investment courses for over 20 years at The Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania. Both CEO Todd Briddell and Global Co-Head of Real Estate Securities Dean Frankel were students of Mr. Urdang's.

“Worldwide, a city's center square is the heart of its vibrancy and the location of its highest strategic value. Our name symbolizes the strategic value we aim to deliver to our partners, namely strong performance built on an entrepreneurial culture and institutional strength.

Investing Globally in Listed Property Companies

Global real estate securities are an integral part of a multi-asset class portfolio, offering attractive risk-adjusted returns, high current income yield, low correlation with other asset classes, enhanced diversification, and superior liquidity relative to direct real estate investment.

CenterSquare's strategy is to invest in a diversified portfolio of global real estate securities with low relative stock prices to provide our clients with high, risk-adjusted returns. Our investment philosophy is founded on the fact that real estate securities are not simply stocks, or real estate, but hybrid financial investments. As such, they are valued on a number of factors in addition to the value of the firm's property portfolio, including critical business and market factors such as the company's capitalization, its position within public capital markets, and quality of its management team. We continually evaluate and arbitrage pricing inefficiencies between a listed property company's stock price and the underlying value of its real estate assets.

CenterSquare's 18+ year track record of consistent alpha generation is a function of our unique approach which brings to bear over two decades of direct real estate investment expertise on the evaluation of real estate securities. CenterSquare offers U.S., international and global real estate securities strategies.

Capitalizing on Value-Added Private Real Estate Opportunities

CenterSquare takes an entrepreneurial approach to creating and adding value to real estate. In our 22 years in business, and approximately $7.0 billion in assets acquired since inception, the firm has developed an extensive network of operating partners that provides access to quality deal flow and vast local market and property sector expertise. We successfully implement various strategic business plans including development, renovation, property improvements, lease-up of vacant space, repositioning of underperforming properties, and timely property dispositions. CenterSquare serves in a fiduciary capacity, with 100% of revenue derived from investment management services.

CenterSquare's investment philosophy recognizes the cyclical nature of real estate and capital markets. CenterSquare offers both Core and Value-Added strategies. Our strategy is designed to anticipate market turning points in order to overweight/underweight property types and geographic regions to generate strong risk-adjusted returns. Our capital markets expertise and solid reputation position us as a trusted investment partner. These long-term relationships provide access to quality investment opportunities.

Our investment approach is designed to anticipate market turning points and to position our clients to benefit from the cyclical nature of real estate and capital markets.

Newsletter: Globe Trotter

NORWAY: OSLO

This edition of The Globetrotter takes us to Norway and its capital, Oslo. While not completely immune from the Eurozone crisis, the Nordic countries have weathered the storm by reinventing their economies. Norway remains a relatively safe haven for businesses, which has led to increased demand for its office space.

As the last financial crisis unhinged many of Europe's national economies, Norway emerged relatively unscathed due to strong private consumption rates, low levels of unemployment and reasonable gross domestic product (GDP) growth driven by the oil and gas sector.

Private consumption accounted for about 41.5% of GDP in 2011, and has been growing ahead of GDP for several years.¹ Unemployment remains very low, with the latest data showing 2.7% for January 2013.² With the exception of one negative blip in 2009, GDP for mainland Norway has grown positively since logging 1.25% in 2011, with the latest consensus figures forecasting 3.6% for 2012 and 2.7% for 2013, respectively.³ Because of these factors, Norway continues as a safe haven for both businesses and investors.

Prior to this most recent trip, we last visited Oslo in the third quarter of 2011, with the main goal of assessing its office market first-hand. At the time, prime rents were growing in the high single-digit range supported by a robust economy and very tight supply. Plans for the continued redevelopment of a number of central business district (CBD) properties were also moving forward.

Even though our off-site analysis and communication showed these trends continuing through 2012, given the on-going Eurozone crisis and our weighting in this market, we felt the time was right for a return trip.

OSLO'S OFFICE MARKET

Oslo's office market consists of roughly 8.1 million square meters of space, 40% of which is located within the CBD. Demand for new space in the city center has pushed annual rental growth in this area to 11.1%, the highest in Western Europe.⁴ Prime yields within this district remained stable in 2012, at around 5.25%, a pace that looks likely to continue.

Outside the CBD, most office zones tend to be located along the city's outer ring road, with the most prominent commerce centers being Nydalen in the north and Lysaker and Fornebu to the west. Yields for higher quality office space in the area tend to be 1.00% to 1.75% higher than prime CBD space, averaging 6.25-6.50% in Nydalen and 6.75-7.00% in Lysaker and Fornebu, respectively.

4. Jones Lang LaSalle / Aarshuis-Eindem, October 2012.

CBD before a multi-use completed, 900 is Oslo's apping and a year, the area

alization, newly nation, ry-based, 20K, 250

Brygge's more prominent buildings.⁵ This is a record rent for the area, over NOK1,000 (US$181) per square meter higher than the CBD average, and close to the highest CBD rents contracted in the previous cycle.

Our research found that a decent number of large tenants continue to look for high-quality space in Oslo's CBD and are likely to sign new leases in Aker Brygge due to its landmark location and suitability for company headquarters. Our visit confirmed this submarket's vibrancy, both as a workplace

5. Aarshuis-Eindem, January 2013.

Oslo's prominence as a "green" capital is well deserved. In the winter, sidewalks in major office and pedestrian districts are kept ice-free by an underground hydroelectric heating system. Additionally, the city remotely monitors and controls its street lighting system based on weather, traffic and available natural light, which has led to significant reductions in energy consumption.

and as a retail and entertainment hub. With its on-going transformation, we anticipate that further deals at potentially even higher rental levels could occur here, due to robust demand and constraints in new supply.

NYDALEN

North of the city center lies Nydalen. Unlike the CBD, this area contains a large residential component and its office space attracts a diverse range of tenants. Historically, the area has held higher vacancy due to a glut of oversupply from previous development cycles. Because of this trend, we wanted to ascertain if there was any improvement since our last visit. We toured a number of office buildings and found that there is still no uniform style to the district or the buildings. However, this has not worked against the area's office market. In fact, this architectural melange has attracted more tenants from the creative industries.

Due to numerous new leases, primarily from a government relocation program to the area, vacancy in Nydalen dropped from over 15% in July 2011 to 5% in December 2012.⁴ With up to a NOK1,000 (US$181) per square meter difference in rents versus the CBD and an improvement in the occupier market, we left Nydalen with an upgraded and optimistic view on this district's prospects. While rents were unlikely to grow significantly, we believe vacancy should continue to decrease.

LYSAKER AND FORNEBU

Lysaker and Fornebu, in the Norwegian municipality of Bærum, act as suburbs and secondary business districts of Oslo. Unlike the city center, there is a large quantity of developable land in these municipalities. Lysaker, once primarily a residential area, began its transformation as an office-park development magnet in the late 1970s. Fornebu was once the site for Oslo's main airport until 1998, when operations were literally moved overnight to Gardermoen, the current site of its international air terminal.

In Lysaker, a 50% differential in rents compared to the CBD will likely convince some tenants to relocate there, increasing rental growth in the area by mid-single digits.

In the early 2000s, Fornebu became a major center for the information technology and telecommunication industries. A decade later, the tenant exposure continues to diversify. Some tenants that traditionally may have opted for space within the CBD have been moving to Fornebu, where rents may cost half that of top-end CBD properties.

Occupier activity continues to be strong in Fornebu; for example, an Irish consultancy firm recently contracted 5,000 square meters of office space. While the availability of land means the prospects for rental growth here is not as strong as in the CBD, we believe it will provide ample opportunity for businesses looking to expand, especially given the difficulty of obtaining sizeable floor plates within the city proper.

A SOLID BASE

We left Oslo with a much better understanding of the current state of the city's office market. While rents are unlikely to grow at the double-digit rates of the recent past, tenant demand for prime space remains solid. Revitalization efforts continue to pique the interest of both Norwegian and international companies from a broad range of industries. With a growing economy, very low unemployment, positive consumption rates and a decent supply and demand balance forecasted for the next few years, the prospects for both Norway's and Oslo's office market remain among the strongest in Europe.

The global economy and capital markets saw continued signs of moderate improvement during the first quarter of 2013.

In the United States, financial stocks continued to post positive modest returns, reflecting better balance sheets and stronger earnings. The U.S. banking industry remained in relatively good shape based on the latest bank stress tests. Further government data releases showed modest improvement in the U.S. economy led by manufacturing, residential construction and technology. Unemployment, however, remains a key concern.

THE BIG NEWS IN THE U.S. ECONOMY was the government budget sequestration that came into effect on March 1, 2013 as part of the Budget Control Act of 2011. These automatic spending reductions, which were agreed upon when the debt ceiling was raised, amount to approximately $44 billion during fiscal year 2013 (Source: Congressional Budget Office, February 2013). This amount is fairly insignificant in comparison to the $3.5 trillion in total government spending. However, when coupled with the 2-percentage point increase in the Social Security tax, the austerity measures could be blamed for the slightly weaker economic indicators in March of this year.

The first quarter brought hints of a change with regard to the Federal Reserve's approach to economic stimulus. The debate over how best to resuscitate a slowing economy extends well beyond U.S. borders. Around the globe, policy makers are locked in existential battles over whether to take austerity measures or enact expansionary policies.

In Japan, government officials are taking an aggressive growth approach, increasing the monetary base by nearly ¥ 7 trillion per month. The plan includes purchasing ¥ 2 trillion per year in ETFs and ¥ 60 billion per year in Japanese REITs, as well as extending the duration of the Japanese government bonds, monetizing the debt and bringing down long-term interest rates (Source: Bank of Japan, April 2013). The short-term effects include a weaker yen and an equity rally, but numerous downrange effects have yet to be measured.

China is also struggling to shift its economy toward domestic growth. Private consumption is stubbornly low and modest capital investment activity is also slowing growth. Hong Kong and China introduced further restrictive residential policy to moderate price growth and as a result, primary and secondary sales slowed as prospective buyers wait to see how policy will play out.

In the Eurozone, Cyprus was the latest country to fall victim to the debt crisis. Meanwhile, a hesitant march toward unified banking regulations adds to investor uncertainty. For now, non-bank sources of financing are filling the capital void in the European Union. Basel III liquidity ratio compliance has been pushed out four years to 2019, giving European banks much needed flexibility for recapitalization. As a result of stimulus measures, interest rates around the globe remain low. This has pushed investors to find sources of investment return beyond cash and bonds. A wave of yield-starved capital is flooding into dividend yielding equities. During the first quarter of 2013, approximately $8.4 billion of inflows went to U.S. registered dedicated real estate mutual funds and ETFs, more than half of the total amount raised in 2012 (SNL Financial, April 2013). Japanese-registered dedicated real estate mutual funds also showed strong net inflows of $954 million, a similar run rate to 2012. This is a trend we have seen for nearly two years, and one we expect will continue in the near term as long as interest rates remain low.

BIG QUESTIONS

While the inflow of cash to real estate has been good for the REIT market, big questions remain:

- Is the market rightly reacting to the "new normal" with higher P/E ratios (lower yields and lower cap rates) or has the market gotten ahead of itself?
- Is today's low volatility a product of safety or a mispricing of long-term structural risks?
- With all the expansion of the monetary base, is inflation inevitable, and if so, when?
- With politics and policy driving the decisions over Europe's debt troubles, is there a discontent vote looming that will shake up the stalemate?
- Can U.S. housing, manufacturing and energy strength jump-start a virtuous economic growth cycle, or will IMF global GDP forecasts fall further during 2013-2014?

Although many of these questions are unanswerable for now, we do see several trends developing.

First, we expect the investment environment to remain supportive of real estate. The Federal Reserve, the Bank of Japan and others have made it clear that interest rates will remain low. This, we believe, will lead to a continuation of a "spread trade" in which physical and listed real estate will offer a significant yield advantage over fixed income investments. Second, GDP growth is moderating worldwide. This makes global REITs attractive for their stable income profile.

“Around the globe, policy makers are locked in existential battles over whether to take austerity measures or enact expansionary policies.”

Q1 CenterSquare Quarterly News

U.S. REIT PERFORMANCE

In spite of new federal budget cuts, higher payroll taxes and the looming debt ceiling, U.S. REITs continued their positive performance in the first quarter of the year, returning 8.2 percent.

Small cap REITs once again produced outsized returns while blue chips lagged. During the first quarter the least cyclical sectors, healthcare and freestanding retail, were the best performers, yet the most cyclical sector, lodging, was not far behind.

We expect few surprises to real estate fundamentals in the year ahead. In the lodging sector, we will likely continue to see conservative guidance lifted, as revenue per available room (RevPAR), a standard industry measure, is already on the high end of growth expectations. Apartments should continue to post above-trend 5+ percent net operating income (NOI) growth,¹ but the best part of the cycle has passed and supply continues to ramp. Industrial vacancy was little changed during the quarter, but big boxes are full and should start to see rent growth and supply growth soon. Small tenant spaces are leasing up slowly but conditions are firming.

Office fundamentals are slowly improving as well. Job growth has been decent but far from robust. New office supply is minimal, however tenants are utilizing space more efficiently, bringing the space-per-employee ratio down. Office rent in primary markets remains relatively healthy, as occupancy and rental rates stabilize—Washington D.C. is the major exception to the rule. Secondary markets are less robust, but certain submarkets have tightened significantly and rent growth has started.

Retail is faring well and should continue to present opportunities. Shopping centers in desirable locations are leased up and seeing solid rent growth. With such high demand for space, even less desirable centers are now filling up. Prime malls are performing well and secondary assets are now improving as well.

GLOBAL REIT PERFORMANCE

Global REITs also posted positive returns during the first quarter, however there was significant decoupling of markets. The global REIT index generated a 6.3 percent total return for the first quarter.² Japan was the standout this quarter

U.S. CMBS Issuance

“In spite of new federal budget cuts, higher payroll taxes and the looming debt ceiling, U.S. REITs continued their positive performance in the first quarter of the year.”

Meanwhile, our outlook for Europe remains gloomy. Europe suffered a series of unfortunate events in the first quarter against what remains an extremely weak economic backdrop. As a result, companies will need to deliver further and we expect declining rents and capital values across most sectors and regions with only a few exceptions. Major Nordic markets such as Oslo and Stockholm still show good office rental growth, and German residential will likely continue to find consistent single digit annual growth in rents. However, core office markets such as Paris and Amsterdam are weak, and we expect risks in peripheral countries to increase following the events in Cyprus.

The United Kingdom is suffering from poor consumer sentiment and a weak currency, yet global capital continues to pour into London. We continue to favor prime assets over secondary assets in this market, as well as certain smaller-cap niche specialist stocks. We expect declines in capital and rental growth to accelerate outside of prime London markets.

“Policy proved to be the great differentiator among regions. In areas with aggressive monetary policy, such as Japan, REITs did very well. Meanwhile, restrictive policies took their toll in Singapore and Hong Kong.”

GLOBAL REIT VALUATION

When compared with physical real estate, we believe listed real estate is fairly valued today. During the first quarter, REITs as a whole traded at about a 5 percent discount to NAV, marginally tighter than at year-end and in-line with the historic average. The discounts widened in several Eurozone markets showing distress, but moved to a premium for U.S. and Japanese stocks. Despite significant underperformance in the bond sector, we expect listed real estate to continue to offer an attractive, sustainable relative yield. As of the first quarter, the global index yielded 3.5 percent and the 1-year projected dividend growth is expected to be approximately 4 percent (SNL Financial, April 2013).

Additionally, we expect there is still room for capital values to rise. Capitalization rates in select prime markets are continuing to compress. However, this is driven not by funding costs but by the weight of equity seeking “safe haven” investments.

Significant capital has already flowed to the market. REITs have raised more than $20 billion in equity, including almost $4 billion in IPOs, the largest of which were in Singapore, Japan and Germany (SNL Financial, April 2013). We expect to see more activity across the globe, as companies trading at or near NAV move to issue equity to deliver or make accretive acquisitions.

MARKET OUTLOOK

We believe the REIT market is well positioned for the next few years.

In general, REITs have strong access to capital, as demonstrated by recent equity capital raises. Balance sheets have strengthened, solvency and liquidity risks are clearly off the table and REITs are in a unique position of being able to fund tenant improvement and leasing commission costs for new leases. This gives them an advantage when competing with undercapitalized private market participants.

In addition, we are seeing continuing improvement of real estate fundamentals. Supply of new real estate is at historic lows. The lack of supply should reduce downside risk in a slowing economy and allow rental rates to rebound more quickly when growth improves to a meaningful level. Meanwhile, demand for commercial space is recovering across all sectors. Occupancies have recovered to near prior cycle levels and market rents are now above in-place rents for nearly all sectors.

Lastly, we expect high dividend payers to benefit from a global search for yield. With government bonds approaching zero percent across the globe, REIT dividend yields remain attractive. In addition, low payout ratios suggest good dividend growth in the future.

OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY – US CORE/CORE PLUS

INVESTMENT ENVIRONMENT

Developed economies continue to exhibit solid rates of growth. The US has avoided a major economic slide from the fiscal cliff, but growth will remain constrained relative to historical levels. Euro zone economic growth has been tepid. Fiscal headwinds will continue to restrain economic activity in the European periphery but positive growth prospects are possible given the low level of unemployment.

Corporate fundamentals remain strong. Though we rearing their heads, in both the investment grade and high yield credit markets. The banking and financial sector provides the most attractive valuations. Spreads are likely to remain volatile as the major global growth environment leaves little margin for policy error.

Both relative growth dynamics and monetary policy are the primary drivers of currency returns. Most major central banks are now actively engaged in policy making and differentiation and magnitude of easing should lead to more divergence in currency performance.

PORTFOLIO STRATEGY

Aggregate portfolio risk relative to the benchmark should remain moderate. Relative volatility is very low across asset classes and we would look at adding in volatility to the allocation only given the low risk position. Portfolio duration is shorter than benchmark. We are positioning to benefit from relative value opportunities in European sovereigns.

Portfolios have a modest overweight to corporate credit. We have increased credit risk exposure in Europe. High yield positions are modest reflecting the low absolute level of portfolio. Portfolios maintain a modest overweight to securitized products.

Selected Emerging Markets countries should continue to benefit from attractive valuations and relative growth differentials. Very few US currencies in hard times opportunities over the intermediate term.

“A slide in US government debt in the US Treasury bill ‘fiscal cliff’”
“Increased portfolio risk in European sovereigns in Italy and Germany”
“Shareholder-friendly activity picks up, pressuring credit markets and increasing opportunities for corporate”

“This is an opinion and not a recommendation. It is not intended to be used as a basis for investment decisions. It is not intended to be used as a basis for investment decisions. It is not intended to be used as a basis for investment decisions.”
