UX & UI Design for Indigo Lighthouse

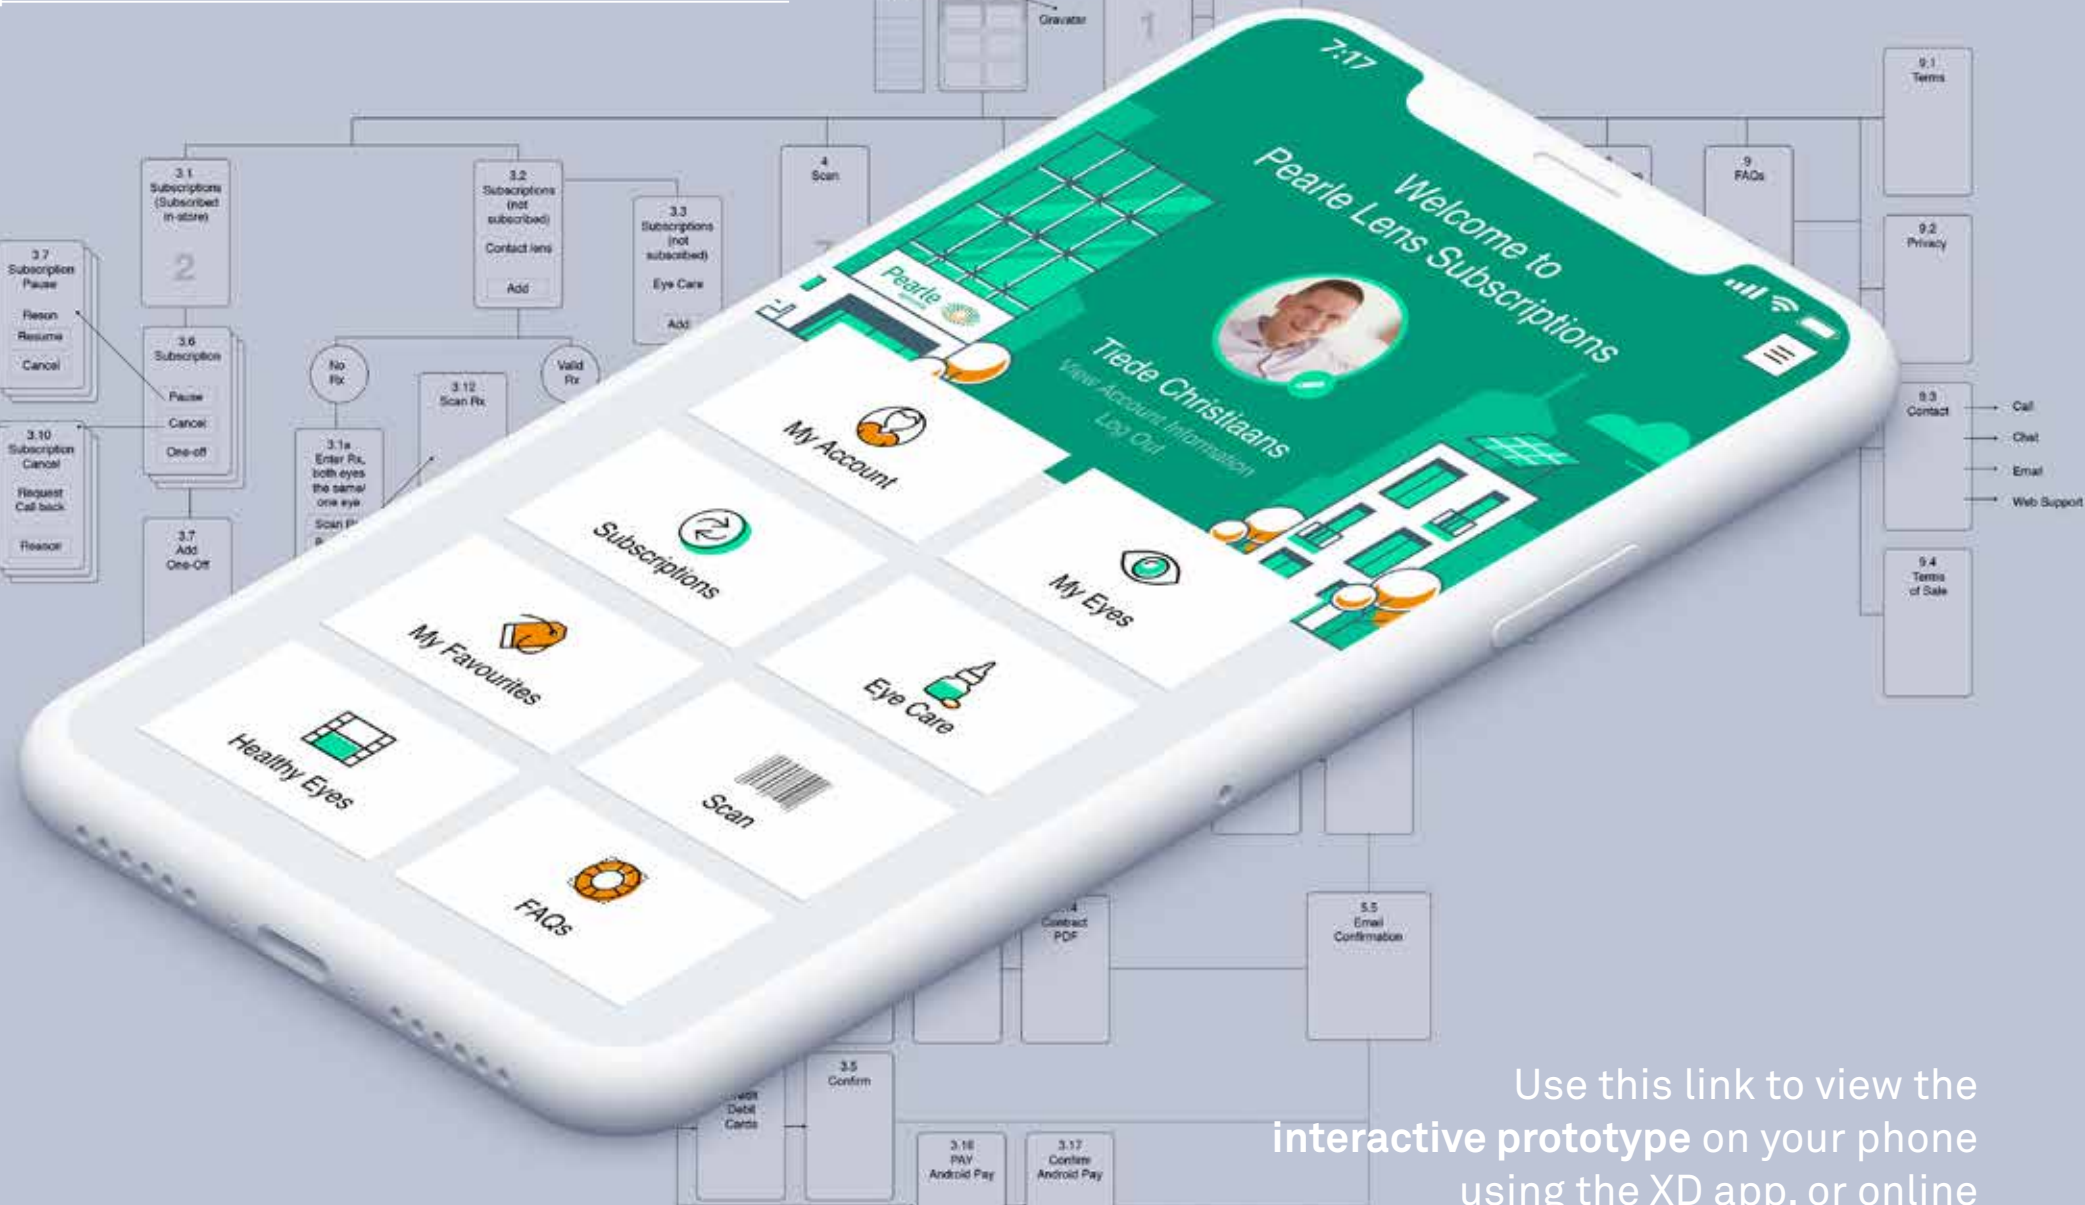

Indigo Lighthouse Group supplies contact lenses by subscription for all the major optical retailers around the world, e.g. for Boots in the UK.

They had a traditional business model when I started working there in June 2014. I was brought on to assist with the digital transformation – creating a global white-label platform that could provide self-service portals and apps for Manufacturers, Distributors, Retailers and Customers.

My role as Head of Design was to design a responsive website and native apps to serve the complete use-journey – at all levels. I worked with the Director of Marketing & Sales and owner in Jersey, along with head office in Glasgow, a SAP partner in Bury and external full-stack developers in London. I also produced all sales materials.

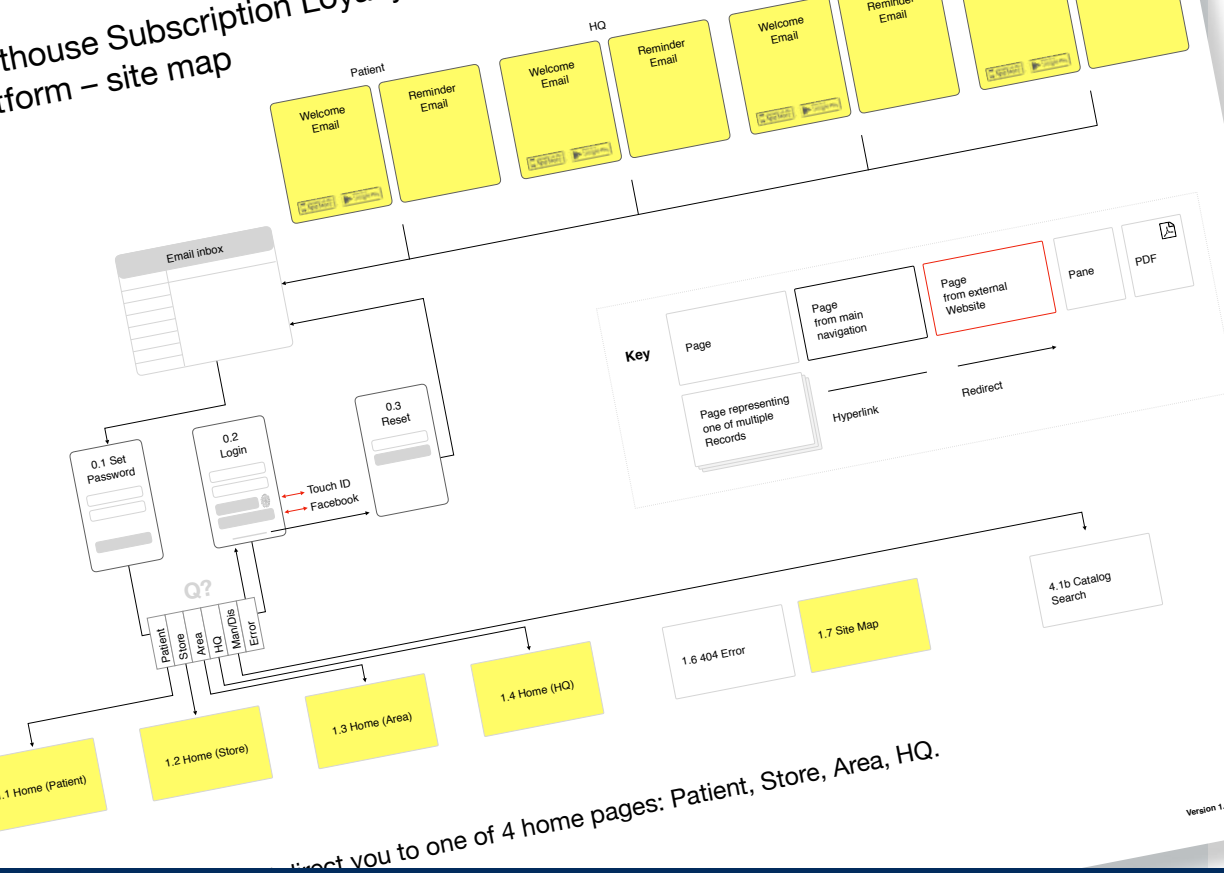

Design and prototyping created using Adobe XD.

IA: Domain Diagrams Concept Models

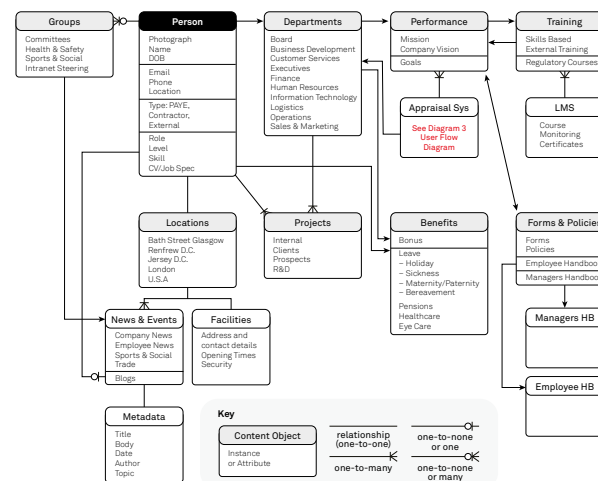

Two approaches to domain modelling, the first are the format put forward by Mike Atherton (Facebook 'Designing Connected Data') and follow a very precise engineering style which can be read by designers, database designers and developers. Page 7 shows a more traditional mind-map style domain model that can be used to engage and promote conversations from stakeholders.

Both pages were used in the design of Indigo Lighthouse's intranet.

UX: Empathy Maps and User Journeys

Straight after high-school I went to art college. I have painted and sketched ever since (www.jharbourne.com).

Whilst studying for a Life Science Diploma ten years ago, I started sketching (brain and anatomy diagrams) in my professional life. Now I'm pleased that sketching has become acceptable and useful once again in my profession life.

Sketches are great for exploring initial design ideas, communicating research findings with stakeholders, and for exploring different design routes.

Web App Retail HQ, Store & Customer

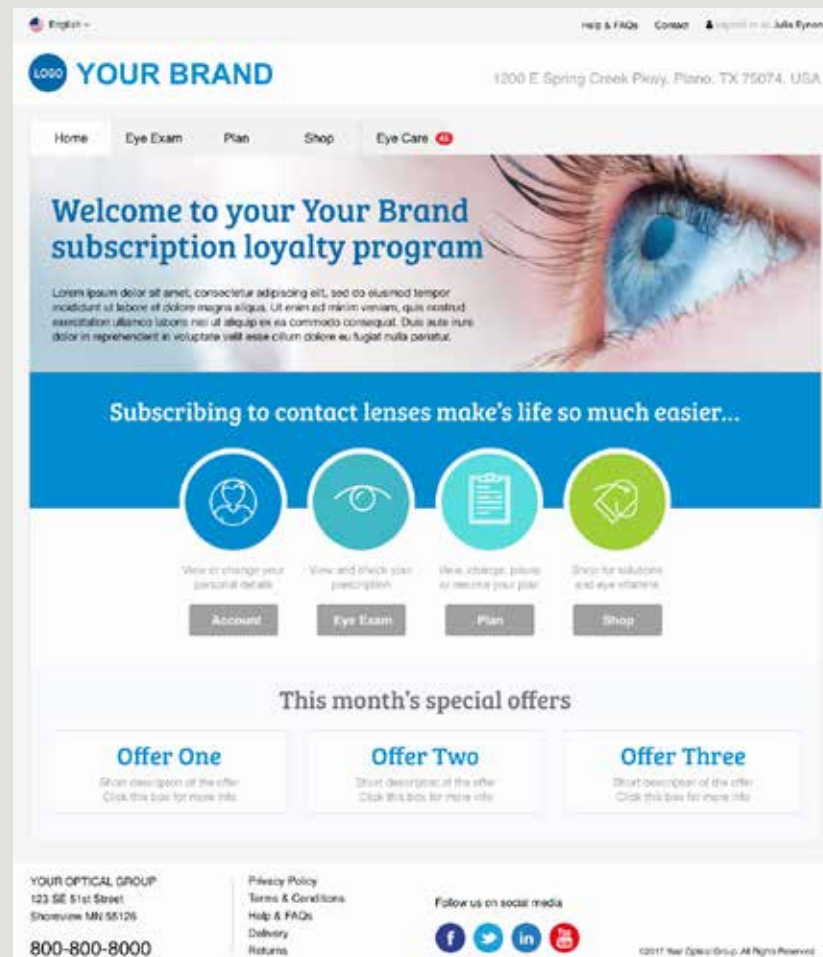

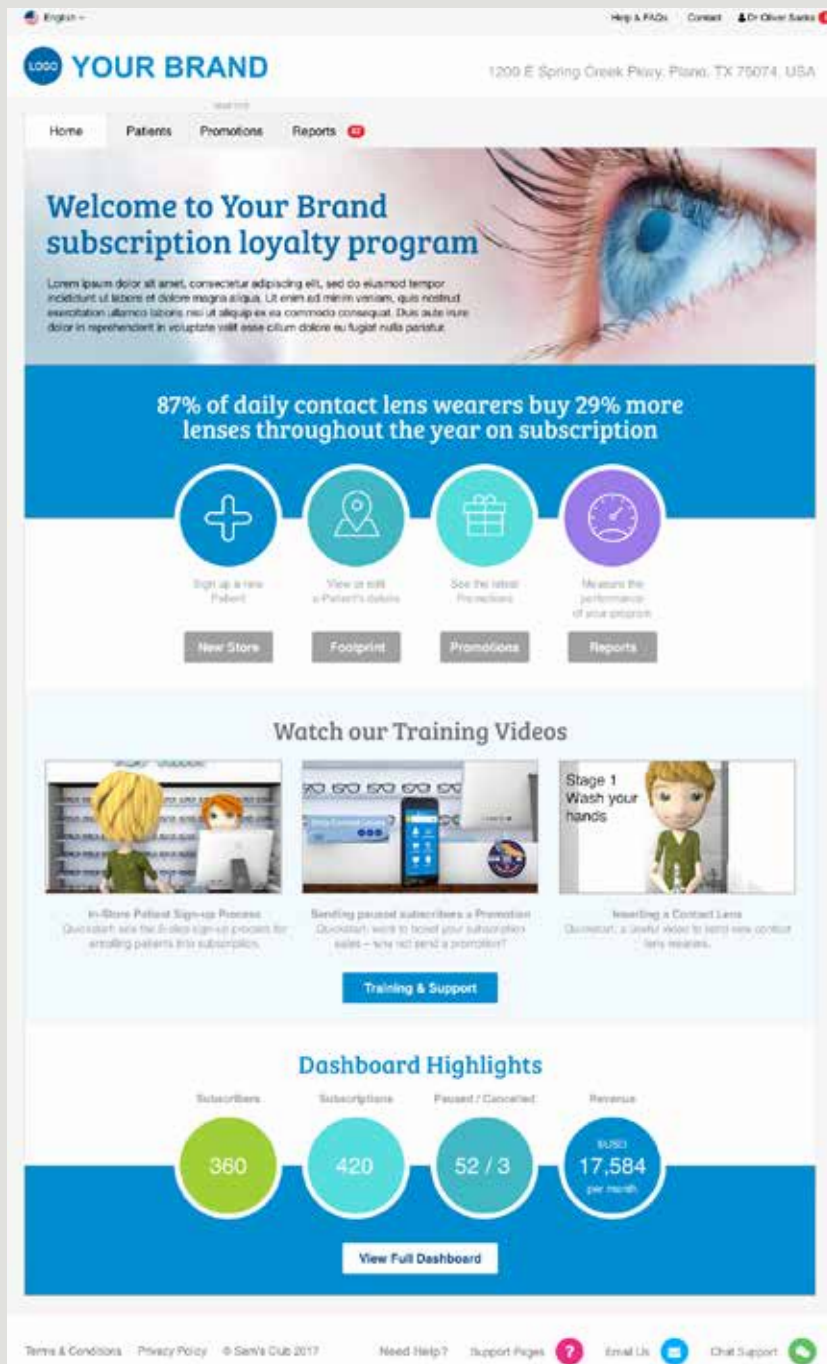

The white-label contact lens app was designed to enable Retail HQs, Area Managers, single and multi store owners, as well as customers, to manage their contact lens subscriptions online.

The app was designed for all devices: in-store desktops, in-store iOS iPads (for signing customers up), as well as responsive layouts for the customers.

The app was modular, so different clients (e.g. Boots, Walmart (Sam's Club) and Grand Vision, could pick and choose the functionality they required.
